Colour-Coded
Brushware

NEW

Fully colour-coded cleaning tools minimise the risk of cross-contamination, therefore there is a need for systems which promote hygienic behaviour. One of the biggest needs is to prevent cross-contamination which means that one food product has contaminated the other. Cleaning tools can spread bacteria from room to room if they are used for widely different purposes. To make it easier to ensure this does not happen, tools which are visually different should be used.

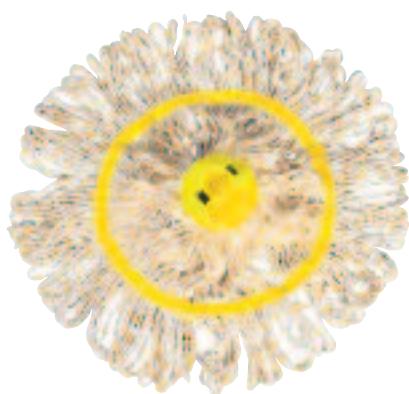

Colour-Coded Cleaning Zones

Good cleaning routines are very important to ensure good hygiene. Colour-coded cleaning zones can minimise one of the most important reasons for cross-contamination. It is not appropriate to clean table surfaces with the same brush with which you a few minutes before cleaned the floor.

By assigning different colours to different zones, cross contamination of product can be eliminated.
